Expressing Solidarity with the Victims of Cyclone Idai in Mozambique, Malawi and Zimbabwe

The African Studies Center on behalf of the Africanist community at Michigan State University extends our deepest sympathy to the peoples of Mozambique, Zimbabwe and Malawi who have suffered the tragic loss of family, friends, and neighbors and the loss of property, the means of subsistence and livelihoods, as a result of the unprecedented impact of Cyclone Idai.

MSU has a rich and long tradition of engagement with colleagues in the region in addition to an extensive network of alumni, friends, and current students. These significant personal connections intensify our anguish over the suffering that we witness daily through video footage and personal communications.

We urge everyone in our MSU community to reach out to our students and colleagues from the region. We are confident that many in our community have already made contributions to organizations providing support to the victims of Cyclone Idai. If you are interested in making a contribution, there are a number of organizations that are providing assistance in the region. The New York Times provides a list of organizations as does PBS: <https://www.pbs.org/newshour/world/how-to-help-cyclone-victims-in-mozambique-malawi-and-zimbabwe>

The Graca Machel Trust, an important regional NGO founded by the former first lady of both Mozambique and South Africa and founding member of the Global Elders group, is also collecting funds that are used to meet urgent needs in all three affected countries: <https://gracamacheltrust.org>

This week is the annual Africa Week here at MSU. African Student groups who are organizing the week's events have expressed an interest in demonstrating their solidarity with the victims of Cyclone Idai. We will forward information on the MSU African Students' initiative when details are finalized.
